

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Five More Washington State Schools Select Creative Teaching CAP Products for their Special Education Classrooms

---

ISSAQUAH, Wash. — September 24, 2009 — Creative Teaching CAP, a special education company dedicated to creating a comprehensive suite of learning tools that is proven to help autistic and special needs students thrive, today announced the addition of five more schools to the growing list of classrooms that are implementing their products. Washington state schools in the Seattle, Snoqualmie, Tumwater, Mercer Island, and Federal Way school districts have all recently selected Creative Teaching CAP products for their special needs classrooms. These schools join other leading-edge Washington State classrooms in the Issaquah, Tacoma, Sumner, and Clover Park school districts, as well as classrooms in Illinois, Pennsylvania, California and Canada, that are producing results using Creative Teaching CAP's suite of innovative learning tools.

"We selected the Creative Teaching CAP suite of learning tools because they are the only products that offered academic and functional curriculum materials to make a successful work system that allows you to implement not only one, but a variety of evidence-based practices," said Sheila Espinosa, Special Education/Autism classroom teacher at Chief Sealth High School in Seattle, WA. "The tools make it easy for teachers to produce and track results while creating fun learning activities for the students. Creative Teaching CAP products also offer the parents of my students a way to quickly assess their children's progress with language skills, making them an integral part of communicating status for my classroom."

Creative Teaching CAP was founded by Anne Scroggs, the mother of a severely autistic and cognitively impaired son. Anne spent over 10 years developing a learning system that gives special-needs students the tools necessary to unlock their learning potential and achieve demonstrable results. Using Creative Teaching CAP tools, special needs students across the country have demonstrated significant cognitive gains, including improvements in their communicative speech.

"It is wonderful to see so many special needs children benefit from these products in classrooms throughout Washington State and beyond," said Anne Scroggs, CEO and founder of Creative Teaching CAP. "The five new schools which have selected Creative Teaching CAP products are raising the standard for special education in Washington State as they actively seek out proven tools that produce real results for their special needs students. As the parent of an autistic child, I hope these schools are recognized for their commitment to making special needs students, like my son, a priority in their districts."

Creative Teaching CAP's system includes noun and verb vocabulary products, activity management products, teaching and student assessment tools, and parent tools products that build upon one another to help non-verbal or verbally challenged students learn to communicate. The system begins by teaching picture recognition and then advances to sight word recognition and eventually phrase and sentence reading to prepare students to use vocabulary appropriately in real life settings. To view videos of teachers and students using the Creative Teaching CAP materials or to purchase Creative Teaching CAP tools for your classroom, please visit: <http://www.CreativeTeachingCAP.com>.

About Creative Teaching CAP

Creative Teaching CAP is a special education company dedicated to creating a comprehensive suite of measurable learning tools that is proven to help autistic and special needs students thrive. For parents and educators of autistic and special needs students who are dissatisfied with the lack of effective educational products available today, Creative Teaching CAP offers the first integrated system of learning tools that is proven to achieve quantifiable results. Rather than require special education teachers to spend valuable time creating inconsistent sets of tools that they 'hope' will work, Creative Teaching CAP has assembled a comprehensive suite of learning tools that are research-based, progressive, engaging and proven in special-needs classrooms across both the United States and Canada. Additional information is available at +1 866.977.6533, info@creativeteachingcap.com, and <http://www.creativeteachingcap.com>.

---

###

Creative Teaching CAP is a trademark of Creative Teaching CAP Corporation. All other products and brand names are trademarks of their respective owners.

Press Contacts:

Creative Teaching CAP

Anne Baker

+1 (425) 442-1806

CAP@bluecreekmarketing.com